EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

- ◆ A State Identification (ID) card or Driver's License is necessary to ensure that ex-offenders have access to jobs, housing, services and medical care upon their release from prison. The ability of an offender to address these needs quickly upon release is critical to reduce the chances of re-offending.
- ◆ The Department of State currently will issue a Michigan ID card only if the applicant can produce 3 documents from a limited list. (See Appendix A)
- ◆ Currently most ex-offenders have only their prison ID card upon release, which DOS will not accept as one of the documents to prove identification.
- ◆ It often takes weeks or even months for an offender to assemble sufficient documentation to obtain a Michigan ID, even if they are helped by human services agencies and attorneys. This is because acceptable documents are difficult to locate and many will not be released unless the offender produces an official identification card with a signature.
- ◆ It can cost $30 -$70 to obtain copies of documents acceptable to DOS, which is money that many offenders do not have upon release.
- ◆ Michigan should follow the lead of over 20 states which permit state prison IDs be accepted as evidence of identification for purposes of the state ID card.

The Center for Civil Justice Supports HB 4525 – 4528 because these bills help address current documentation and financial barriers that ex-offenders have in obtaining identification quickly upon release from prison.

TESTIMONY

Chairman Condino and members of the Judiciary Committee, my name is Terri L. Stangl. I am the Executive Director of the Center for Civil Justice. CCJ is a non-profit law firm that works with low income persons and the many organizations who serve them, including community-based agencies and faith-based organization. We use outreach, education, and advocacy to help low income persons receive the support and services they need to move themselves out of poverty and toward greater self-sufficiency.

In the past few years, I have worked as a part of several projects that identify and address civil barriers to the successful re-entry of ex-offenders into the community. I have been the co-convenor of a state level multi-agency task force that has met on these issues for about 4 years. I have participated in Michigan Prison Re-entry Initiative advisory groups at both the state and local level. I also worked with a group within the State Bar of Michigan that is investigating these issues.

I appreciate this opportunity to report on the problems faced by ex-offenders when they try to obtain a Michigan State ID card upon release from prison. I am aware of many community, governmental, and faith-based organizations throughout the state who are struggling with these problems.

Immediate Access to State IDs Are Critical To Prevent Recidivism

Research shows that the first few months after a prisoner is released is a critical time to avoid re-arrest.¹ An ex-offender is much more likely to stay clean during this initial re-entry period if she or he has access to stable housing, employment, substance abuse and healthcare treatment and services. Unfortunately, in many instances the paths to these resources may be closed entirely to offenders who cannot produce a Michigan ID card or driver's license. Many governmental buildings, programs and services, require state

(These arrests resulted in about 41% being back in jail or prison within three years.) Another study published in 2000 by the Bureau of Justice Statistics found that 62% of individuals who leave jail or prison each year are re-arrested at least once within three years and 41% are re-incarcerated. identification for entry or access. Federal law requires employers to verify an employee's identification. A growing number of landlords request Michigan ID cards as part of their application process. Businesses will not cash checks without a Michigan ID or driver's license.

In addition, as a result of recent federal legislation, if a prisoner or parolee cannot obtain a copies of his or her birth certificates due to a lack of a Michigan ID, then that individual will be unable to receive Medicaid to pay for health care, including prescriptions, through the Medicaid program. This could be very costly for Michigan, because Medicaid currently helps to pay for in-patient hospitalization of inmates and also pays for healthcare - including substance abuse treatment and prescriptions - for eligible ex-offenders.

Michigan DOS Does Not Accept Prison ID Cards as Proof of Identity

The Michigan Department of State currently does not accept Prison ID cards as proof of identity. DOS requires 3 types of acceptable ID and proof of residence before it will issue a state ID card. A list of those documents is attached as Appendix A. DOS will not even accept a Michigan Prison ID as one of the 3 documents required to obtain a Michigan ID.

Many ex-offenders have only their prison ID card when they are released. This means they must begin the process of locating and recovering documents, sometimes from other states. This places many ex-offenders in a "catch-22" because many of the organizations who may have acceptable documents for obtaining a Michigan ID (e.g. health departments, school districts, employers, etc) will not release them unless the requester provides a picture ID card that includes a signature. (The Prison ID card doesn't include a signature.) Ex-offenders don't have a Michigan ID card precisely because they haven't been able to get the documents which are withheld until the offender gets a Michigan ID card. The offender is trapped in the middle.

Examples

Our office recently helped a man who had been trying to get a state ID for months without success. A local community organization had employment documents and a birth certificate, but he needed a third piece of documentation. The DOS would not accept his prison ID card. The community organization could not get his school records (which we identified as the only other type of acceptable documentation on the DOS list that was potentially available to him) because the school district would not release them without a copy of a Michigan ID or drivers license. Because the lack of school records was preventing him from getting the Michigan ID, I was able to convince the school district's administrators to release the records to me as an attorney who had reviewed all the man's available documentation. If he hadn't found me as a lawyer, or my negotiations hadn't succeeded, he'd probably still be without a state ID.

In Saginaw County there is an organization called the Partnership Center, which is operated by a group of churches, and which helps ex-offenders. Their Director reports that it takes a long time and requires donations from the churches before many ex-offenders can get the documents they need for Michigan ID or driver's license. Until they get a Michigan ID, these ex-offenders cannot participate in the Work First Program or even obtain emergency food from some area pantries. If offenders cannot find work, stabilize housing, and obtain basic services, they risk being in violation of parole conditions. Young offenders, who may have never before had a Michigan ID or license, are at special risk. If these offenders are forced to return to jail because of a parole violation or because they return to crime in order to support themselves, then this is very expensive for Michigan taxpayers and harmful to the parolees. (The Partnership Center's Director, Georganne Hemker, could not attend today's hearing but her statement is attached as Appendix B.)

Connection to Michigan Prison Re-entry Efforts

The Michigan Prison Re-entry Initiative that is under way at the Michigan Department of Corrections plans to work with prisoners so they can obtain a Michigan ID card prior to the date of release. However, the same barriers that have stymied offenders after release also are likely to be a problem for inmates, unless prison IDs are accepted as proof of identification. Prisoners generally do not have access to ID documents other than their prison ID card and a prison ID card may not be accepted by other states or organizations as sufficient to obtain other proofs of identification from health departments, schools, etc. Prisoners have little money with which to purchase copies of documents. Prisoners are not able to access to the internet or out-of-state directories to find organizations that may be able to provide acceptable identification documents. The Michigan Department of Corrections does not have staff resources needed to locate and advocate for the release of other identification documents. If prisoners cannot use their prison ID to verify their identity, then they will find it at least as difficult - if not more difficult - to obtain a Michigan ID prior to release than it was to obtain it after release.

Legislation is Needed

Michigan needs to enact legislation to ensure that Michigan prison IDs will be accepted as at least a secondary form of identification by the Department of State. As of 2003, the Departments of Motor Vehicles (DMVs) in twenty-two states accept some form of Department of Corrections (DOC) documentation as proof of identity. Six of these accept DOC documentation as primary proof of identification. Since that time, it is my understanding that Texas has also passed a law that requires the Texas Department of Public Safety to accept photo ID cards from the Texas Department of Criminal Justice as valid proof of identification. See http://www.hirenetwork.org/ID_Survey_Summary.htm

CONCLUSION

The Center for Civil Justice supports and encourages the enactment of HB 4525 – 4528 because these bills help address current documentation and financial barriers that ex-offenders have in obtaining identification quickly upon release from prison.
